1. PROJECT PROPOSAL

1.1 Background to the Problem

In the modern digital era, students often struggle to find reliable and verified academic opportunities due to information being scattered across numerous websites and social media platforms. This fragmented nature of information leads to confusion, misinformation, and missed opportunities, particularly for scholarships, competitions, seminars, admissions, and online courses. As a result, many students are unable to efficiently plan their academic and career paths.

The absence of a centralized and trusted platform is the root cause of this problem. Existing sources are frequently outdated, unverified, or incomplete, forcing students to spend significant time searching across multiple platforms. This situation creates unequal access to opportunities, especially for students with limited resources or guidance.

To address this challenge, EduSphere has been proposed as a centralized academic opportunity management platform that aggregates verified opportunities for learners ranging from school to PhD level. EduSphere organizes opportunities in a structured manner, displaying key details such as deadlines, eligibility criteria, and direct application links. Advanced search and filtering options based on category, level, date, or type further simplify access and decision-making.

The system targets students as its primary users, while also supporting teachers, parents, and educational institutions who wish to guide students or share academic programs. By offering personalized dashboards, opportunity tracking, and notification features, EduSphere enhances user engagement and planning efficiency.

Overall, the proposed solution promotes time efficiency, informed decision-making, academic growth, and inclusiveness by ensuring equal access to reliable information. Additionally, future enhancements such as real-time alerts, consultancy services, and premium features will further strengthen the platform's value. The system is also designed to be financially sustainable through subscriptions, sponsorships, advertisements, and paid educational services.

1.2 Selection of Process Model

The process model that is most suitable for building this project can be Scrum model, which is type of agile model as well.

The Scrum model is an Agile software development methodology where the system is developed in small, time-boxed iterations called sprints. Each sprint delivers a functional part of the system, allowing the team to focus on one set of features at a time. Scrum emphasizes collaboration, transparency, and flexibility, with regular reviews and feedback sessions to ensure that the development aligns with user needs.

In Scrum, roles such as the Product Owner, Scrum Master, and development team coordinate to plan, execute, and review each sprint. Tasks are managed using a backlog, and progress is tracked daily through stand-up meetings. This iterative approach enables teams to adapt to changing requirements and deliver a usable product incrementally.

Scrum was chosen for this academic opportunity platform because the system's requirements are dynamic and may evolve over time, for example, new filters, dashboards, notifications, and premium features. Compared to other models like Waterfall or V-Model, Scrum allows flexible development, early delivery of functional features, and continuous feedback from students, organizers, and administrators. It also helps the team manage complexity, prioritize tasks efficiently, and maintain transparency throughout the development process, making it ideal for building a reliable and user-centered platform.
